1. From your viewpoint, what is the current status of research in CWIE?
  2. The WACE International Research Group has worked on identifying gaps and themes for where research on CWIE should be going. Can discuss some of those gaps and comment on the impact knowledge in that area will have on the CWIE community?
  3. In your opinion, how can research best influence the transfer of theory to practice and vice versa?
  4. What barriers do you believe stand in the way of building stronger research on CWIE?
  5. What advice would you give to a new junior researcher in this field?

Open Space Technology was conceived by Harrison Owen in the 1980's as an alternative method to generate powerful working conversations about complex topics that are of interest to a diverse and passionate group of participants. This session will provide a brief overview of the OST approach and an opportunity to practice part of the process as we explore questions of interest that have been generated by your conference participation or that remain incompletely answered and in need of further exploration.
